MUTH'S TRUTHS

(Chuck Muth) – President Donald Trump's speech last night was a barn-burner that has been widely applauded by most Americans.

But not Nevada's two Democrat U.S. senators.

Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto – fresh off voting AGAINST keeping men out of women's sports this week – opined that Trump is “threatening to gut Medicaid, Social Security, and public education funding” and “is focused on paying for tax breaks for his billionaire friends.”

Not true, of course. But when did that ever stop a Democrat from trying to score political points by trotting out the ol' “Tax Breaks for the Rich” card?

Nevada Sen. Jacky Rosen – who also voted AGAINST keeping men out of women’s sports – seconded that emotion, claiming “Trump is looking to cut Medicaid to pay for more tax giveaways for billionaires.”

It’s almost as if they’re all reading from the same talking points script.

Masto and Rosen seem to be having difficulty adjusting to their newfound irrelevance – along with the rest of their Democrat colleagues in Congress.

But, hey, at least they didn’t get kicked out of the chamber last night!

FAMOUS LAST WORDS

“I could find a cure to the most devastating disease, a disease that would wipe out entire nations or announce the answers to the greatest economy in history, or the stoppage of crime to the lowest levels ever recorded, and these people (congressional Democrats) sitting right here will not clap, will not stand, and certainly will not cheer for these astronomical achievements.” – President Donald Trump

“President Trump’s speech wasn’t a speech for the mainstream media, it was a speech for the American people. The way Democrats behaved was unserious and embarrassing.” – House Speaker Mike Johnson
